Not illustrated.1895 Excerpt: ... CHAPTER XXV. A PLEA FOR UNITY. When again this earnest trio were favored with another metaphysical evening, Mrs. Millard reverted to those cases of which they had recently seen so painful an example, and asked concerning the treatment of obsession, which Mr. Seawright admitted called for more mental action than ordinary healing. "Is it," she asked, "a concentrated will-power which you use, or a command to the unwelcome visitor to depart?" "I sometimes command where they are stubborn, though it is more a certain forceful impetus which I use toward their dislodgment, also an upward aspiration for all three of us--the real patient, his victim, and the healer--like an invitation, 'Come, let us go up higher.' The embodied patient is constantly being helped, meanwhile, to a plane of realization where further obsession would be impossible, for such condition could never touch an enlightened soul." "Why should it ever be possible?" exclaimed his mystified listener. "Why, madam, we are all living in the world of spirit to-day. We are immersed in a seething sea of spirit-life, in spheres of conscious spirit-existence. Multitudes of souls pass from earthly embodiment every hour. Most of these remain in the borderland of mundane existence; their attractions are all here; they are unable to get away. Floating through our atmosphere, these wandering entities chance to meet or are attracted by a certain personality. They become entangled, as it were, in the aura surrounding that person; sometimes they cannot get away; often they cling desperately, as you know, from the desire to have a body to use. The ability to free such a one is an imperative need in the healer's work of today. Until he thus casts out unclean spirits, he is not doing the perfect work of Christ. 'He cas...
